Europe at the Third Inflection Point

GREGORY F. TREVERTON

University of Southern California

The last few years mark the third inflection point in global politics in the last half century, one tragically punctuated by the war in Ukraine. The previous two were the end of the Soviet Union and 9/11. Both of those seemed to come with a user's guide, which wasn't entirely right but wasn't entirely wrong either. For this one, there is no guide, and applying labels like "new Cold War" is unhelpful in thinking about relations either with China or Russia.

The roots of the Ukraine war are a tangle including some "might have beens" – none of which, however, remotely justify Russia's all-out, unprovoked attack. So far the hallmarks of the war have been Putin's brutal miscalculation and the unity of what we used to call the "West." That Europe and America joined quickly in responding firmly – with Germany moving further in two weeks than in previous decades – suggests new possibilities for a coalition of democracies. That the war was both bloody and illegitimate has forced fence-sitters to choose sides. Perhaps even China will come to realize that siding with Putin is to lose with a loser.

About the Speaker:

Gregory F. Treverton stepped down as Chair of the National Intelligence Council in January 2017. He is Chair, Global TechnoPolitics Forum and senior adviser to the Transnational Threats Project at the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) and a professor of the practice of international relations and Spatial Sciences at the University of Southern California. Earlier, he directed the RAND Corporation's Center for Global Risk and Security and before that its Intelligence Policy Center and its International Security and Defense Policy Center. He has served in government for the first Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, the National Security Council and Vice Chair of the National Intelligence Council. He has taught at Harvard and Columbia universities, in addition to RAND, been a senior fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations, and deputy director of the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London. He holds an AB summa cum laude from Princeton University and an MPP (Master's in Public Policy) and PhD in economics and politics from Harvard. His latest books are Telling Truth to Power: A History of the National Intelligence Council, (edited, with Robert Hutchings), Oxford University Press, 2019; and National Intelligence and Science: Beyond the Great Divide in Analysis and Policy, (with Wilhelm Agrell), Oxford University Press, 2015.

Renaud Camus, Éric Zemmour, and the Great Replacement

ADAM ZIENTEK

University of California, Davis

The Great Replacement is a racist conspiracy theory that holds the super-rich elites of the 21st century seek to replace the white inhabitants of Europe with immigrants from Africa and the Middle East. It is, on the one hand, ludicrous and incredible; but it is, on the other hand, arguably the most powerful movement in the west against universal human rights in the 21st century—not only in Europe, but in America too, where the Great Replacement theory is a staple of right-wing media. I will consider in detail the work of the French thinker Renaud Camus, the global prophet of the Great Replacement theory and explain the nature of his theory. I will then proceed to discuss how the Great Replacement theory has influenced the political thought of one of France's most important, prominent, and xenophobic contemporary political figures, Eric Zemmour, who is currently running for President and coming in third. I will conclude with some brief comments about the upcoming French presidential election.

About the Speaker:

Adam Zientek is Assistant Professor of History at the University of California Davis. Zientek is a historian of modern Europe with a focus on France. He is interested in the social history of war, the history of military medicine and psychiatry, and the history of alcohol and drugs. Professor Zientek's research focuses on the experience of trench-fighting in the First World War. He investigates how soldiers mitigated the psychological pressures of fighting by analyzing soldiers' daily practices and rituals. His current manuscript, Wine and Blood, considers the role that state-sponsored alcohol consumption had in shaping the French experience of the war. He is also interested in using recent research in the neurological and cognitive sciences to help historians make sense of human behavior in the past.
